

What is a California marine protected area (or "MPA")?

An MPA is a type of managed area primarily set aside to protect or conserve marine life and habitats in marine or estuarine waters. California's MPA Network consists of 124 areas with varying levels of protection, and 14 special closures, all designed to help safeguard the state's marine ecosystems. Fishing and collecting are banned at marine reserves such as Bodega Head State Marine Reserve, providing this MPA with the highest level of protection.

One goal for California's MPAs was to strategically place them near each other to form an interconnected network that would help to preserve the flow of life between marine ecosystems. Within that network each MPA has unique goals and regulations, and non-consumptive activities, permitted scientific research, monitoring, and educational pursuits may be allowed.

Why was this location chosen for a state marine reserve?

One of the goals for Bodega Head State Marine Reserve is to protect rocky reef, surfgrass, kelp forest, and sand/mud seafloor habitat in a region known for persistent upwelling of nutrient-rich water. Together, the reserve and the neighboring conservation area cover about three-quarters of one of the largest rocky reefs in northern California. The reef itself covers about 10 square miles and extends to a depth of 260 feet, creating habitat for a wide variety of marine species. China rockfish, lingcod, and kelp greenling are common on the reef, along with giant red sea cucumber, white-plumed anemone, and sea stars. Dungeness crab search for food on the sandy seafloor, while California halibut camouflage themselves in the sediments.

Bodega Head State Marine Reserve shares a southern border with Bodega Head State Marine Conservation Area and overlaps the Bodega Area of Special Biological Significance, Bodega Marine Life Refuge, and a portion of the Greater Farallones National Marine Sanctuary. Placing a state marine reserve here provides very high levels of protection for local marine species and the habitats they use.
